*To all the hope—the eager confidence—
That challenges a mountain or a sea;
To inspiration, which must always be
Child of a creed of simple elements;
And to the vision, running far ahead,
Piercing the misty future with its light,
Illumining each hollow and each height
Along the course whereon our feet shall tread;
And to the patience that can toil for years
To see a dream take shape and be fulfilled;
To steadfastness of purpose which can build
A work to take its place among the spheres;
And to the love of beauty, which appears
In sky-saluting peak or lowly nook,
Haze-veiled or sharply cut—to these this book
Is dedicated—to our Engineers.*

—Ray Miller

Foreword

There is a city in Egypt, a metropolis of over a million people, which in its antiquity and hugeness of size is at once an outpost of a new civilization and the center of an old. But out of this old city have come emperors and Pharaohs, men and leaders of men, among a people who shaped and moulded the future of their world and ruled over much of it at one time; a people producing a band of seamen who piloted their galley through the Gates of Hercules and halfway down the coast of Africa centuries before the Christian era!

So we like to think sometimes of Engineering: with a glorious present and future, but with a past immense almost beyond comprehension. It was not far from that city at the head of the Nile Delta and in a time not remote from its founding that the life story of engineering began. Southward along the river are found the mighty Pyramids and Sphinx, huge obelisks quarried in single shafts of stone, statues sixty feet high hewn on the face of cliffs, and crypts and temples cut within.

Passing down through the sweep of years we see the traces of the great Babylonian towers and arches of brick, and then—Greece! Here was a people who built the most beautiful structures in the history of time, a people so skilled in engineering that they constructed curves to counteract optical illusions that would have made a straight line appear as bent!

Then came the Romans with their roads, their aqueducts, their own temples, their Forum, their Colosseum, unique in its grandeur and immensity. Afterward, in the Middle Ages, there began to arise the massive towers and battlements of those splendid old feudal castles. Later, when the cities were appearing, we know of the Gothic cathedrals, with reinforcing abutments that there might be the heavy roofs and the beautiful stained glass windows, with gargoyles outside that there might be a more whole-souled religious atmosphere inside.

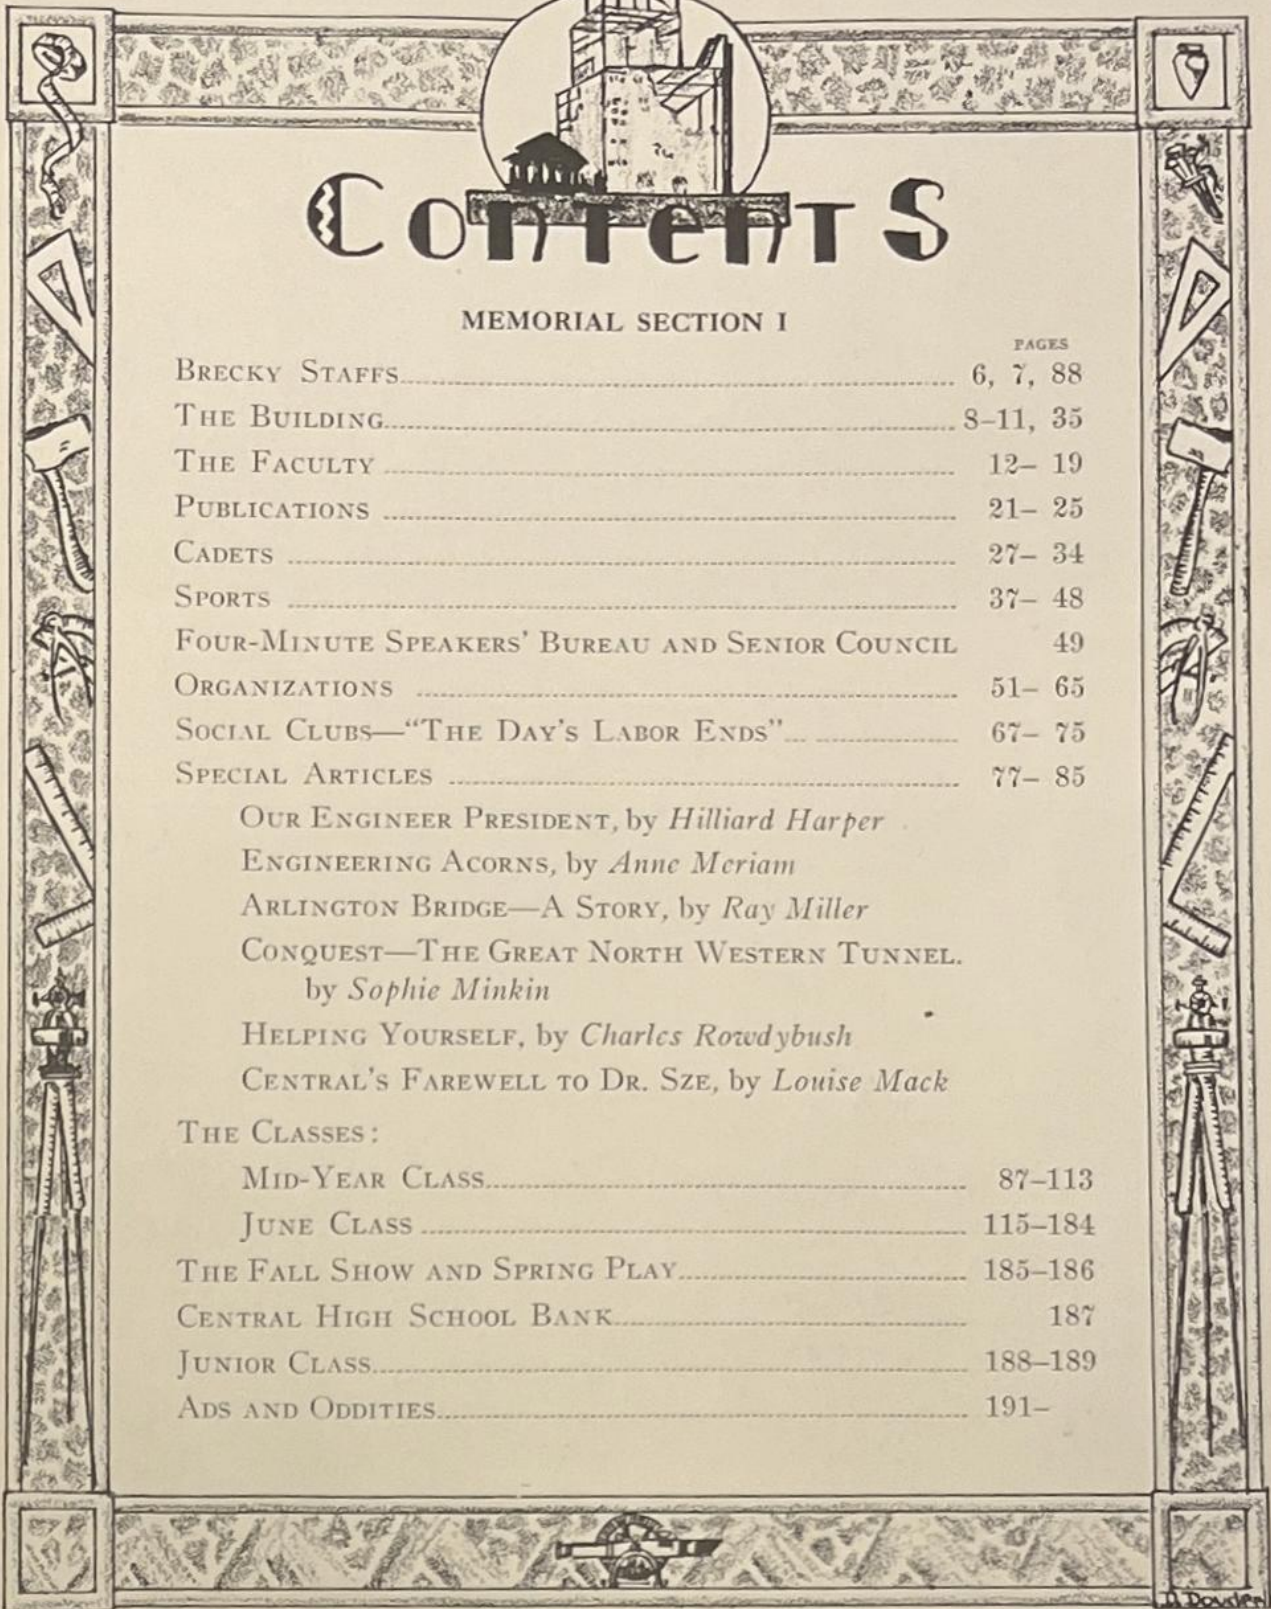

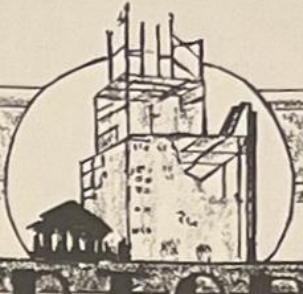

Such has been the past of Engineering. It is a life story as old as the history of mankind and fully as varied and absorbing. Through it all has run, like a connecting and unifying force, the spirit of classic beauty. In its works have been embodied the soul, the dreams, the ideal of the aesthetic gropings of the nations of the earth. Up to the present it has meant in a large measure the medium through which loveliness was grasped and held for its own sake.

Then in the last hundred years a fundamental change spread over the globe. The great Industrial Age had its birth and beginning. The factory overshadowed the temple. Engineering was called to the task of building up the commercial system of a planet. Wars burst forth and smoldered out, leaving each time a larger proportion of an already distorted world drooping and diseased in heart, apparently seeking ugliness as it might a false god.

Now, however, we stand in the dawn of a new period. A stupendous drama among the clouds becomes apparent as the light grows clearer. Shadows recede. The great science, which for thousands of years has formed in beauty the finer things of its peoples, is making another conquest. The every-day, the matter-of-fact, the common and useful are becoming lovely, too. No one can deny the charm of a skyscraper and its grandeur. A much-traveled bridge which cannot be constructed of classic marble may nevertheless be breathtaking in its grace. Tunnels, canals, dams, ships, and even factories, are growing less and less hideous. Symmetry is not at all an impossible luxury. And the less material things are rising more slender and more spiritual. Gothic cathedrals are going up once more, and monuments are graceful again.

It is our world which Engineering is building, our inheritance from the past, and the fulfillment of our dreams for the future. It is rather as a personal tribute, then, than as a mere expression of gratitude that we of the Class of 1929 offer our book, The Brecky, in dedication to Engineering and the man who is a leader of Engineers as well as of his fellow-men, Herbert Hoover.

ALVIN W. MILLER

"The lesser griefs that may be said,
That breathe a thousand
tender vows,
Are but as servants in the house
Where lies the master newly dead;

Who speak their feeling as it is,
And weep the fulness from the mind:
'It will be hard,' they say,
'to find
Another service such as this'."

IN MEMORIAM

An Appreciation

In Behalf of the Faculty

"With malice toward none; with charity for all."

For a decade, Alvin W. Miller lived among us, as fellow-teacher and principal. Surely it is a tribute to him that now, when he is no longer among us, we can think of him in these two great phrases of another kindly man.

One and all, during the past ten years, we have experienced those "little, nameless, unremembered acts of kindness" which Wordsworth calls "that best portion of a good man's life." Whether we went to Mr. Miller as a fellow-teacher, in the bank, during the earlier years, or as our principal, in his office, more recently, we found him unfailingly courteous, friendly, kind. As the faculty of our Central High School, as men and women engaged together in this great enterprise, we pause to bow our heads before the memory of Alvin Miller.

"With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in."

BESSIE WHITFORD.

ALVIN W. MILLER
An Appreciation in Behalf of the Student Body

IN MEMORIAM

Hear you the sighing of the midnight wind,
The sorrowed lapping of the restless deep?
Listen, for they mourn too: this night a planet,
The flickering pole star, beacon of the sea,
Has been extinguished. Long, long it has burned
And seemed to show the way from shore to shore
Unfailing, constant as the air: eternal.
No storms dislodged, no massed clouds brushed it down,
And after every gale, still there it shone,
Still cheerfully it twinkled with a light
That gave the weary courage to go on,
Now that the course was pointed out again.
Then came tonight. Low in the north it hung
Above the foam-capped swell of the evening breeze,
Silent, brilliant. Suddenly it burst
Into all the accumulated splendor
Of its years, and in a flaming streak
It dropped below the rampart of the north,
Leaving an aching gap among the stars,
Whence it has slipped to darkness and to peace.

RAY MILLER.

IN MEMORIAM

Close on the realization that we have lost our principal comes remembrance of him as we have seen him day in and day out at Central, a genial man with a twinkle of recognition for many, a ready friendliness for all. We took him for granted. He was part of every chapel, subject often to good-natured jest in its program. We frequently passed him in the corridors or saw him mingling with the students in the lunchroom, and few of us have had cause for discomfiture even when facing him across the great desk in his glassed-in sanctuary.

Our activities, our interests, our welfare were Mr. Miller's. In his busy days he found time to visit our classrooms, to attend games more faithfully than we did, and to make plans for our enjoyment as well as our discipline. He was patient, forgiving, and mild in reproof; but, more than for these gentle qualities, we young people loved him for his never-failing, sympathetic sense of humor.

There is something sweet in sorrow at the passing of a man of whom we have only pleasant thoughts.

ANNE WOODWARD KING

IN MEMORIAM

Day by day, throughout the busy school years, hundreds of hurrying, restless boys and girls have passed to and fro down the long main corridor on the first floor, glancing in the office as they went, at their principal, sitting at his official desk. Day by day the joyous crowds have swarmed into the auditorium on chapel mornings and gradually settling in their seats, turned expectant eyes toward the familiar figure that advanced to open the exercises. Perhaps it was an enthusiastic chapel, a rejoicing over a hard-won victory, an appeal to the student body—no chapel was ever complete without the principal's remarks. Sometimes they were his congratulations, sometimes gentle pleasantries, sometimes deserved reproof; but whatever they were Centralites listened, for the one who spoke was one who knew and understood them.

Day by day they passed him in the halls, always ready with his friendly smile, not minding the throngs of young people who jostled him along with themselves.

Even the littlest and loneliest rookie knew Mr. Miller, he was so essentially a part of all school life. How many times students looked up from their lunches to see him standing in the doorway glancing in, not critically, but in the spirit of interest he felt in everything that concerned the student body.

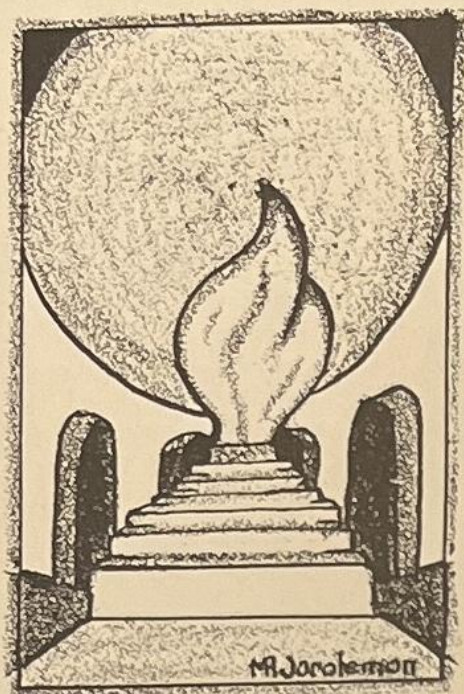

Each year could be to him but a repetition of other years, yet his interest and enthusiasm were always fresh and always genuine. Of how many crowds of cheering rooters was he a part, and how many spring plays and fall shows counted him among their audiences! His appreciation was always sincere, no one ever saw him bored or disinterested. Each year the cadet hops, the dinners, the celebrations are new and thrilling experiences to the boys and girls, to him they were a familiar part of his routine, but each group has always found him a jolly and sympathetic mixer.

No summons to the office ever struck cold terror into the heart of any Centralite. If the matter were one of slight importance, a certain lurking twinkle behind those shell-rimmed glasses and an ill-feigned severity were speedy reassurance. If the occasion were one of real seriousness, then his quiet gravity and dignity gave him admirable command of the situation. The students instinctively felt his affection and kindness toward them, and it was to this that they responded rather than to strict disciplinary measures, which he was not often obliged to take.

Though not many students could put it into words, perhaps, the quality which drew Mr. Miller to them was the innate sweetness of his nature and his very real fellowship with them, which made him so anxious that Central's highest standards should always be maintained.

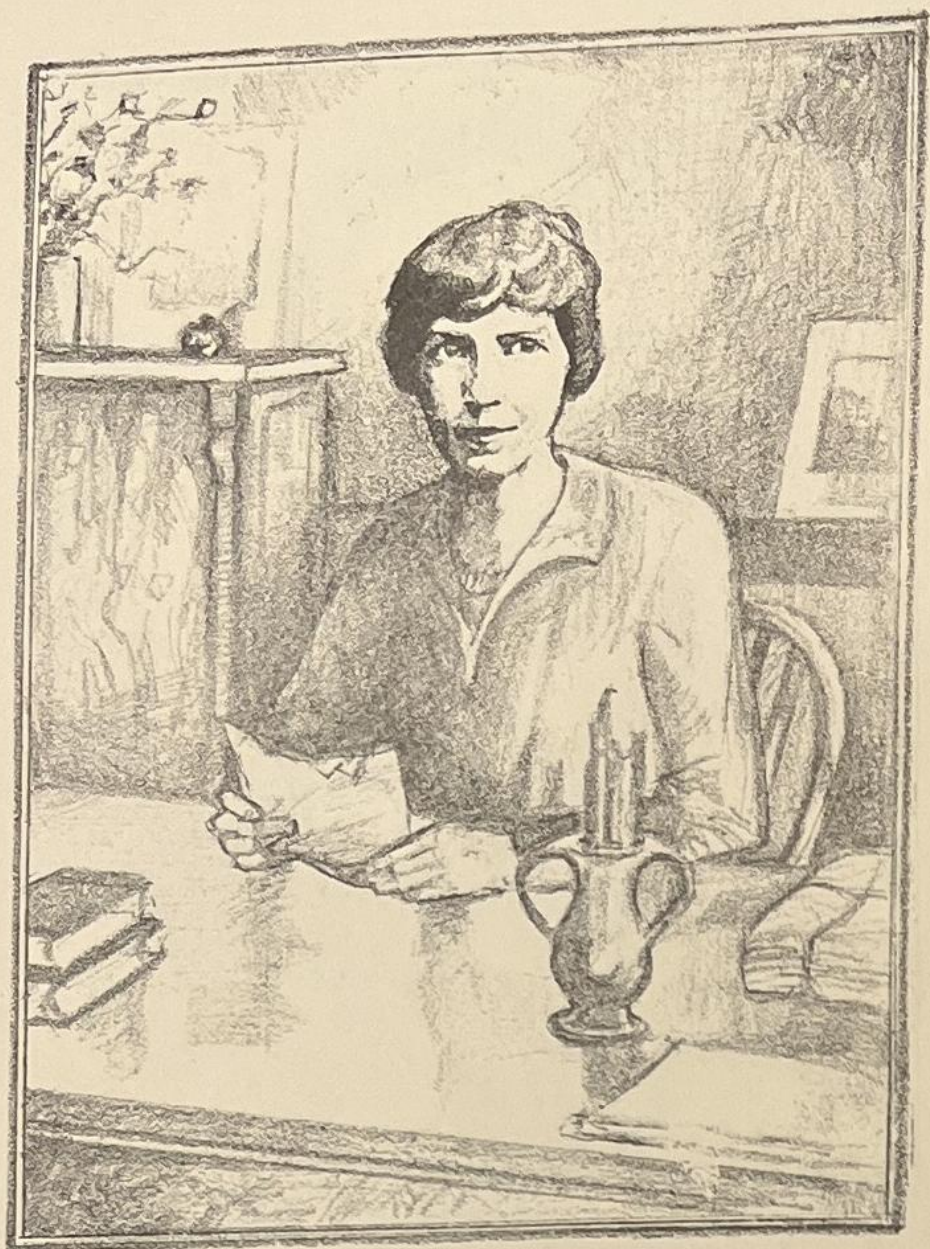

For four years, now, Central graduates have carried away with them his parting good wishes. We, of the class of June, '29, are denied that privilege, and for that reason "Auld Lang Syne" will be all the harder. Yet we have that which even death could not take away, the memory and associations of one who was the truest Centralite of them all.

The Bulletin and Review

ANNE KING

LEE ANNA EMBREY

WHEN the Bulletin and Review appear before their public in all the spick and spanness of crisp white paper and fresh ink, their orderly pages give no hint of the long hours and many steps in their publication. Room 321-A, where many volumes of Reviews and Bulletins have been edited, is tucked away around a corner on the third floor, and during the day presents a scene of apparent inactivity. But let the unsuspecting layman come around after school some copy day, and what a beehive of editorial industry meets his eyes?

The Bulletin, published weekly, has its copy days every Thursday and Friday. On these days the reporters, who are members of the journalism classes, submit their stories. These must be sorted and given to the editors of the four pages, who then must go over them and indicate all necessary corrections. Corrected copy then passes into the hands of headline writers, who, to be really efficient, must have the knack of finding just the right combination of words to fit into the allotted space. When the story has finally assumed the shape in which it will appear, it is handed over to typists and emerges neatly typewritten. On this copy headlines are printed and marked with directions for the printer, who receives the Bulletin at this stage. Saturday morning finds a group of editors at the printer's finishing up late stories and odd headlines. The galleys are also received by the editor at this time. Galleys are long strips of paper on which the news is printed just as it will appear in the Bulletin. There are duplicate copies of each galley, one to be corrected for typographical errors and the other to be cut up and pasted on the dummies. The dummies are like dress patterns; they indicate to the printer what each page is to look like. The printer receives the pasted dummies on Monday afternoon. Tuesday he gives the editor proofs of the pages, which are checked over for stray mistakes; and bright and early Wednesday morning Centralites receive the Bulletin in the final stage of its evolution.

Almost microscopic in the mass of students at Central is the group which is fully initiated into the mysteries of publishing the Review. To produce this fifty-six-page magazine seven times a year in a really competent way is impossible because of the brief term of each staff. Every year a green editor and twenty-odd green staff members begin at the beginning, only to approach efficiency as their work draws to a close in the spring.

There are four distinct steps in the making of the Review, each of which entails a careful reading of all the material. On copy day, staff members and faculty adviser gather to cull the best from the stories, poems, and articles submitted. When the choice is made, the editor and faculty adviser must proof-read and occasionally censor the copy in preparation for its dispatch to the Read-Taylor Press in Baltimore. In a week's time the copy comes back in galley proofs, a white set to be corrected, and a pink set to be cut and pasted in the dummy—an old Review. After another interval the copy is once more sent to be proof-read in the advanced form of page proofs. The editor then heaves a mighty sigh of relief and mails the thoroughly memorized pages for the last time. They appear shortly afterward within a bright cover, the product of unthought-of processes extending over a period of thirty days.

Having let you into the secrets of the publications' office, we hope that we have injected the quality of sympathetic understanding into the cooperation of those who subscribe to our Bulletin and Review.

Four years ours , the school , the word .
And - as we file out through that door -
Still loving , still as deeply stirred ,
May we not claim them as before ?

Our Engineer President

HILLIARD HARPER

WHAT a career! From orphan boy in the Quaker village of West Branch, Iowa, to humanity's international diplomat. From the village smithy to the development of lead mines in the jungles of Burma and the restoration of iron and copper mines in the Ural Mountains. From a college boy who carried papers and laundry to earn his expenses to the President of the United States.

When Herbert Hoover left Stanford University, he obtained a modest position in a mine at Grass Valley in California, on the strength of his degree in mining engineering and geology and his college reputation. In the succeeding twenty years, first as mine laborer, then as mine manager and operator, in all the deserted places of the world where mineral wealth is found, he made for himself a unique reputation and a comfortable fortune. His books and monographs on engineering are standard textbooks in colleges today. To his admitted technical proficiency as an engineer he added proven ability in organizing and financing, and became identified eventually with a group of mining financiers and operators with offices in New York, London, Holland, and elsewhere. This group was engaged in mining and metallurgical enterprises in almost every quarter of the globe.

From California he went to West Australia, and thence to China, where he was engaged in the development of coal and iron deposits when the Boxer rebellion cooped him up with other foreigners in Peking. In that city he underwent the siege of 1900. Before the allied troops relieved the legation prisoners, he had organized his food relief for Chinese and other refugees. Later he built a port in China for the owners of the mining properties. Thereafter he initiated and directed mining and metallurgical enterprises, most of which were successful, in Burma, Russia, Alaska and Mexico. It was estimated that 175,000 men were employed by corporations of which he was acting as executive in 1913.

Keeping up his connection with scholastic and research activities all during these years, he found time to translate, with the collaboration of his wife, "De Res Metallica," a Latin work which is the earliest known treatise on mining.

Before he was forty Hoover had explored the interior of China for metals, penetrating to places that had never seen a white face before. He had been wrecked on the China coast. He had served a machine gun at the siege of Tientsin. He had suppressed riots in the abortive first Russian revolution. He had incurred the wrath of a German strafing party. He had trakked the veldt of South Africa, ridden the bush of Australia, traveled by droshky over the steppes of Siberia.

In Asia-Minor he had investigated the old jewel mines of the Pharaohs. The old

"O. K.?"

"O. K.!"

The o'd Ford slid into the line of traffic down the hill once more. Soon we found ourselves breezing down Fourteenth, but were abruptly halted at Rhode Island Avenue by the lights. Once past, we road laughingly on to K Street.

"I wish you'd look at the way that building is going up. One story back from the one below."

"Where?"

"On the right."

"Oh, that is the latest in architecture. Just came from New York. You see, the city officials have to limit the height of buildings according to the amount of light that will reach the street below. Architects, however, by constructing in this manner are able to go higher and obtain yet plenty of light."

"Well!"

By this time we were riding down K and soon turned at Tenth. We did not know what was on our driver's mind; we hoped—the road! We drove down B Street to find a foundation and some steel framework beside us and—that was all.

"What is that?"

"The new building for the Internal Revenue. It is a part of the Governmental building program now underway. At Twelfth Street if you look south across the Mall, you will just be able to see the connecting portions of the Agricultural Building in about the same state of completion. A number of years ago the main part and the wings were erected, but it is only recently that they have decided to finish the original plan."

We were riding right along when suddenly we were halted by a word from the back seat.

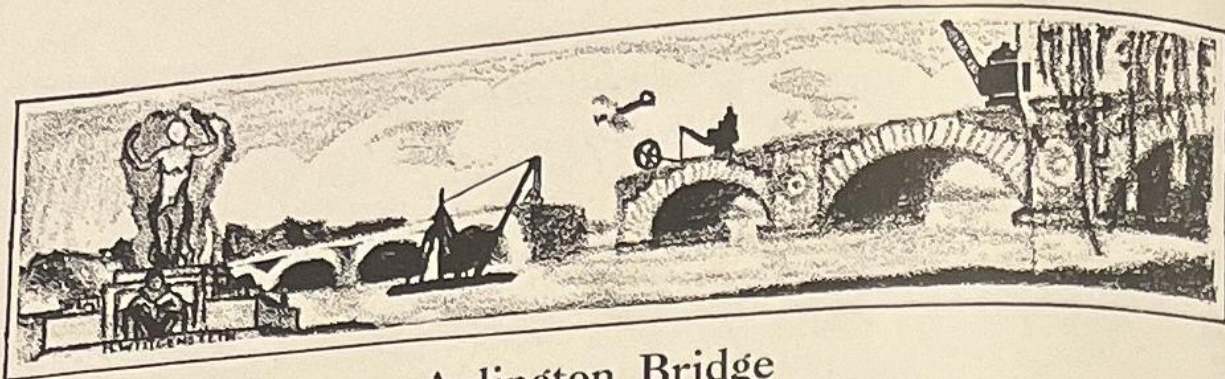

"Go slow, up there! As long as we are in this neighborhood you might observe the new Department of Commerce Building here between Fourteenth and Fifteenth, and B and E. As you see, it is in its early stages, but when completed will be quite an imposing edifice. The first plan was to have three buildings for the Departments of State, Commerce, and Labor in these three blocks. However, a change was made, and now this entire area is being devoted to one large building for the Department of Commerce. If any one of us should be around here this time next year, no doubt he would be surprised to view this dignified structure."

Soon we found ourselves on Seventeenth Street, bound for the Speedway. We sped along until we came to the new Arlington Bridge, but that had not advanced very far, either. They were only putting up the arches, but it was interesting to watch them work.

"Some day that will be one of the handsomest bridges across the Potomac," said our source of information, and we all agreed.

Taking the most direct route possible, we were, after a bumpy journey, approaching Mount St. Alban's, on top of which, through the foliage, could be seen the Washington Cathedral, bathed in gold by the late western sun. Standing so high and majestic, it seemed like a great mother looking fondly on her child—our city. Our minds were filled with the STRETCHING across the river like a huge angular caterpillar lay the arches of the unfinished bridge. There was a cool whiteness about them in the sun that reminded one of white duck and other summer accessories, although summer was as yet beyond the southern hills. Spring had undoubtedly come, however. There seemed to be a tang of it in the air. Clusters of men working at concrete mixers or cranes or loads of cement-ballast shouted to each other and laughed often. The western breeze was soft. Spring!

Ted Carter at that moment was standing near the District end of the bridge, covering a pine board with figures, bent over it as over a table. So this good-looking young fellow in plus-fours was one of those mysterious engineers, at whose command mountains move, lakes form or disappear, and seas are united!

This was his first real chance, he was thinking for the thousandth time. He had been working hard, and there was no reason why he should not come out of the job a somebody. Then, a project of his own—no more staff positions. Then money, and a name. After that . . .

He aroused himself. Another of those dull throbbing booms was coming across the water. Out of the corner of his eye he saw a cloud of dust and shattered bits of trees mushroom into the air and settle again. Still blasting on the island. Thank God he didn't have to work with stuff like that. Dynamite was tricky, no matter what the cynical veterans said.

Teddy bent once more over the board. Then there was Mary Margaret. After he had his first million—she'd promised, anyway. And red-headed girls, especially such pretty ones, usually kept their word. His thoughts returned to the bridge. It was going to be a beautiful job. The thousand-and-first thrill vibrated down his back. It was a sweet life.

Hours pass swiftly when one is young and it is spring. The men were getting a lot done today. Arlington Bridge would soon be a finished product. Ted noticed that the blasting crew was piling up the remnants of the trees on the island shore to be burnt. The booms! Tide would be in in a few hours and put out any fire they started there. Later, as he was leaving, he saw the dynamite barge coming down the river, moving away from the fire. Well, that at least was sensible.

Evening came, and the moon and stars appeared at last. The bridge gleamed, a white dragon, almost ethereal in the moonlight. Up the river along the sea-wall a canoe was coming, gliding slowly on the lispings waters. Ted and Mary Margaret—and what a night for romance. They passed on, up toward the bridge. Presently the canoe slipped out of the light into the dark, beneath an arch. When it emerged on the other side boy and girl were laughing. Over to the right loomed the shadowy bulk of the blasting scow, anchored near the bridge.

"The boat is filled to the eyebrows with dynamite," Ted offered in an exaggeratedly casual voice. "Enough to blow half of Washington to kingdom come." Mary Margaret shuddered and both laughed again.

It was Carter who first saw it: the section of a great knotted trunk wedged against the barge, gleaming in a long streak against the boat's side. His mind explained it soon enough.

Conquest—The Great North Western Tunnel

SOPHIE MINKIN

THE MOUNTAIN rose in glorious magnificence as do children who have grown tall and straight in the wilderness. It stood alone, as those who are free in spirit always do. True its vast sides were covered with smoky evergreen and fresh young pines and cheerful low bushes whose green smell filled the air, but these were no more to him than mortals are to gods. Often on a starry night when the dark emptiness rested on his summit he would look far across the great stretches where the warm yellow lights of tiny homes marked the difference between earth and the icy whiteness of the stars.

He wondered about those people. They were so infinitesimal beside his stoic splendor, and yet they did things he could not. Wind and water and space were nothing to them. Only he had curbed their restless, ever-seeking ambition, for, when they had started to build the new railroad, his greatness had challenged and defeated them. The men did not like the defiance he hurled at them. Often great roaring trains went by on the circuitous route, and the locomotive's shrill whistle, echoing through the stillness, sounded like the plea of a lost soul. For the mountain, that cry was man's gesture of woe, vainly beating against his solid walls. Then he would look at the stars again and listen to the evergreens' whisper as they told tales of their ancient ancestors who had lived on the mountain. He would sigh contentedly and go on with his dreamy loneliness.

* * * * *

A small, stuffy room, lit by a glaring electric bulb which shed its lurid brightness to every corner, was the scene of ceaseless work for two men. They were bent over a table so littered with plans and mathematical computation that no one but them could have found anything save the table. The smoke of their cigarettes wound itself throughout the place like drunken ghosts whose respective shades have become entangled. Their brief snatches of conversation revealed nothing as to the nature of their work. Finally one of them threw down his pencils and charts with evident relief. He strode to the window and stared out. "Can't see the mountain now, it's too dark. But we won't have to see it when those plans are finished, will we?" he asked of his fellow-worker.

"No, that tunnel will be the most perfect thing of its kind in the world, and what is more, think how much is saved by going straight through," was the answer.

"You know, sometimes I have an eerie feeling about it all, and I wonder if the mountain will resent our boring through it like this."

"Don't be a fool and don't get poetic. You're not in high school any more. Think of that piece of engineering when it's finished!"

* * * * *

A storm was pouring its wild frenzy on the mountain. Perhaps it was a final attempt on Nature's part to drive off the invader from this last of her strongholds. Deep-voiced thunder rolled across the vaulted sky. The lightning shook its fiery darts; rain slid down in armies, great gleaming spectres of stalking wetness, against the trees and shrubbery. At the broad base a few busy workers scurried into the shelter of the newly started tunnel. Either this encouraged or infuriated the old dame, for suddenly the air was teeming with hard, icy particles. They bounced to the earth swiftly, striking leaves and twigs from the plants. Out of the gray nowhere the hail came. The mountain seemed to be suddenly alive with it. Infuriated emissaries from above hurled and bounced and slid along the sides. Everything was moving, living, jumping. The slender new branches of the pines swayed trembling in fear for their light-green beauty. So, the storm continued, beating ceaselessly against the mountain as if to drive the busy little men outside. Nature, though, had foiled herself. When she built the mountain, she made it of impenetrable thickness—to man. But man was too clever. He was working inside and was protected by the precaution intended as a weapon against him.

Helping Yourself

CHARLES ROWDYBUSH

“OUR YOUTH are pressing more and more into our institutions of learning,” said President Hoover in his inaugural address. Today higher education is the goal of many. It is a goal well worth the effort. Let us consider our future when we act in the present. We who are to disband soon will either continue our studies or start to work. A survey showing what a profitable combination could be made of the two might be of interest. Many of our foremost men and women were self-supporting college students. If it is necessary to pay our own freight in order to reach the top, dad ought to get that new car this year.

For the sake of explanation let us say that A is to B as C is to D—success is to education as work is to achievement. Mathematical, philosophical, and psychological students might differ with this proportion. At any rate, you are given the four quantities. Juggle them to suit yourself.

A diagnosis of C's relation to B might dispel gathering clouds of gloom among those of limited means. If the skin you love to touch—dad's old leather pocketbook—is worn and scarred, don't pull a long face. Rejoice, for you have a chance to start at the bottom of the ladder and possibly reach the top if you are not arrested for speeding. Your style may be cramped here, but there is so much room at the top of the ladder that you might even feel lonesome.

Next September many of us will be clamoring at college gates throughout the country. Instead of “pressing” in we will probably elbow our way in. It is the old question of survival of the fittest. Central lights and Central-ites, we are as fit as any, and the old school expects us to survive and lead the field during our college careers.

For those already decided upon a career, there is apt to be one or more colleges offering the course we want. Let's take one and not more! The liberal arts college beckons those who have not yet found themselves. There is nothing to be ashamed of in not having decided upon a life work, but don't wait too long.

*Find yourselves some day soon,
Don't just sit around and moon!
Life's ahead and its lots of fun,
If you start in now and really run.*

P. S.—Be sure to run the right way.

Upon arriving at college, if necessary, see the employment bureau and then register. Some of us have done work here at Central that should help us along. For instance, how about those who carried their trays to the end tables in the lunchroom, or passed the books in the music-room, etc., etc. The practical experience received at Central High School should be an introduction anywhere.

To get back to the diagnosis of C's relation to B, student employment bureaus will help you to find a position, or a job suited to your talents—take all you have when you leave for college.

The Farewell Chapel in Honor of Hon. Sao-Ke Alfred Sze

LOUISE J. MACK

THERE are always certain occasions that will remain the most impressive events of the entire high school career. Years hence those who are now juniors and seniors on the "peak of the hill" will remember with the greatest pride the chapel, given on February 20, as Central High School's farewell to the Honorable Sao-Ke Alfred Sze, a graduate of the class of 1897, on the eve of his departure to Great Britain as the Minister from China.

The memory of this chapel will not fade soon, for the fame of Dr. Sze was long ago established in Central's hallowed traditions, and no list of his many important diplomatic achievements or illustrious honors was needed to introduce this famous graduate of Central High to the present student body. The fact that he has served seven years both in Great Britain and the United States as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from China is the highest proof of his excellent character and ability as an international statesman.

Therefore, it was with unusual eagerness that the students responded to the summons for chapel. Dr. and Madame Sze were seated near the center of the stage surrounded by many classmates and friends. The auditorium was wrapped in a profound silence as Mr. Alvin W. Miller, the principal, opened the chapel. Later, while listening to the tributes given by Dr. Sze's classmate, Miss Mildred Dean, Mr. Robert Maurer, and Mr. Randolph Shaw, the audience was often moved to sympathetic laughter and applause. Dr. Sze himself smiled broadly many times during the chapel and listened attentively to every word.

These tributes were followed by an appreciation of the Morgan Memorial Room, which was presented by Dr. Sze several years ago in memory of Miss M. Ella Morgan, one of his teachers of old Central. Honorary membership in the Central Chapter of the National Honor Society was conferred upon Dr. Sze by Marion Myers, the president, and Madame Sze was presented with a beautiful basket of flowers. The graciousness of Madame Sze and the friendliness of Dr. Sze won the hearts of the students. With sincere enthusiasm the students arose to pay their tribute in a verse especially written to the tune of "Tenax Propositi," which seemed to express their sentiments most aptly in these lines:

*"As you depart from us today,
We bid God speed you on your way!
Central is proud of you, her son,
And all the honors you have won,
Yet wear so graciously."*

Dr. Sze seemed to feel the sincerity of these tributes deeply, and when he arose to respond he showed his appreciation in his friendly words and manner. He mentioned the coincidence of the fact that this farewell chapel was taking place on the same day on which he was to have the pleasure of signing a treaty with the United States. In regard to this treaty, which is the first to be entered into by the Nationalistic government of China with any power, Secretary Kellogg had said that it "is in conformity with the traditional American policy of friendship toward the Chinese nation." The Central students appreciated

Dr. Sze's good will when he expressed his gratitude to the United States for assistance during the famines in China, but they felt the greatest thrill when Dr. Sze told them that he was fortunate in having attended such a wonderful school.

The unbounded enthusiasm of the applause following Dr. Sze's response has seldom been equaled in any chapel. However, in reality, it was only an echo of the great admiration held by the present students of Central High for one of Central's vanguard who

“* * * long ago
Made smooth the road whereon we go,
With many a victory.”

Miss Clem I. Orr wrote a fitting tribute to Dr. Sze, which she gave at this chapel. It best expresses the high esteem in which Dr. Sze is held:

ANCHORAGE

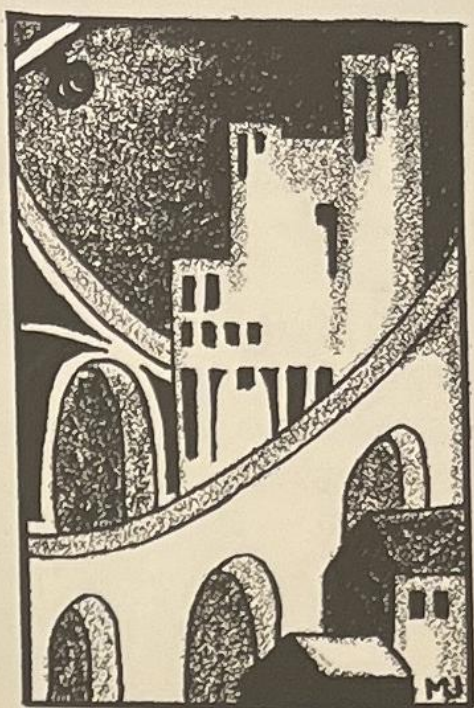

*Our minds are puzzled by the world today
With all its restlessness, with all its strife,
With all the new complexities of life,
With changing standards, drifting far away*

*From old traditions that so long held sway;—
And, madly rushing in the modern race,
With forward movements trying to keep pace—
“There seems for us no anchorage,” we say.*

*The man we meet to honor, in this hour,
Is in himself an answer to our need:
From East or West, whatever be our creed,
Safe anchorage is found in well-used power,*

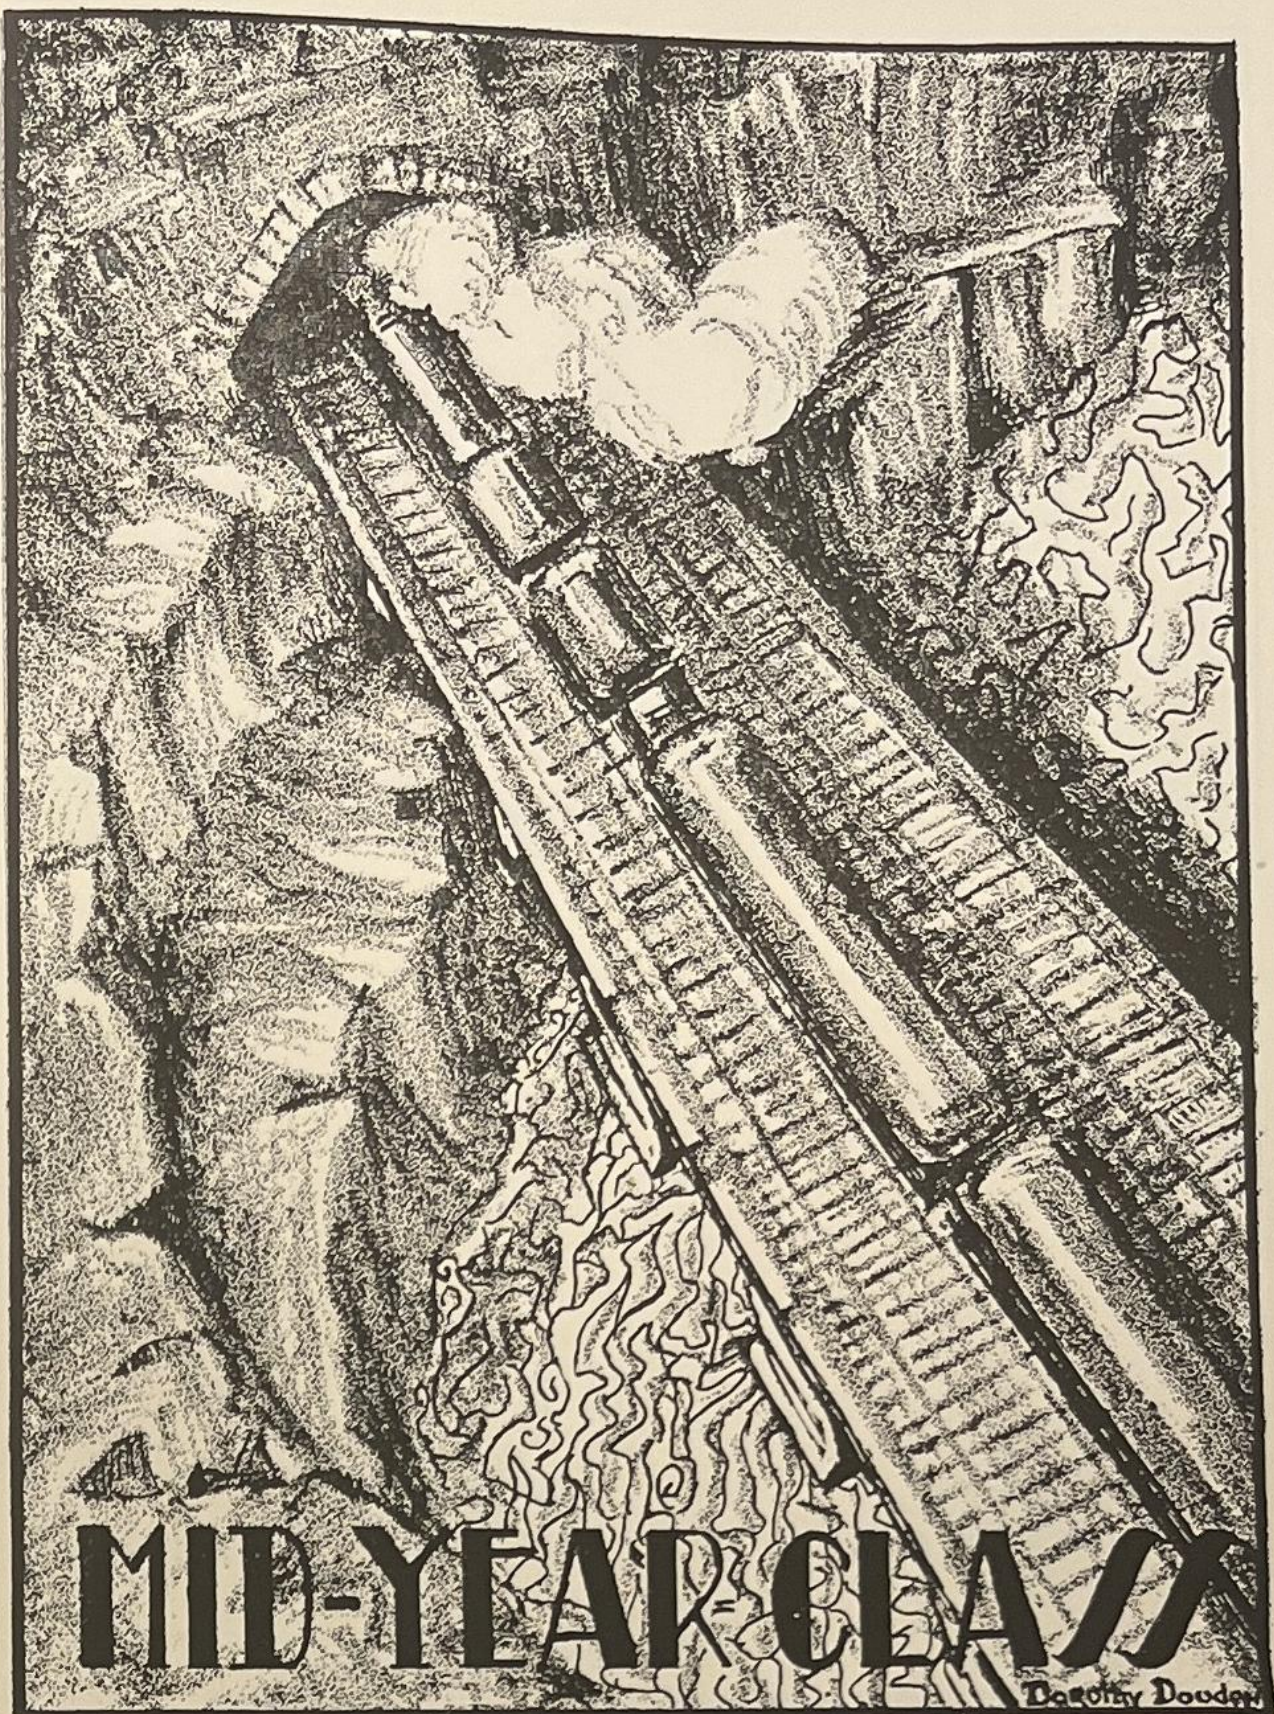

*In noble character, in gracious mien,
In loyalty to friends, in modesty—
Though other Nations with our Nation vie
To claim the benefit of insight keen*

*In world affairs.—As long as Central finds Among her sons a man admired of men
For traits like these, we may take heart again.
Here is safe anchorage for storm-swept minds.*

*The final girder has been laid
And every rivet driven in.
The work is done, our bridge is made,
And we may cross to lands within,
Entering fields so long surveyed
Across the chasms yawning thin,
But now impatience is allayed:
Our sojourn there will soon begin.
And we may celebrate among those drowsy glades a few sweet hours,
Before we leave for projects new: another realm of thought is ours!*

Class History

Mid-Year, 1929

Dear Friends:

IN YOUR last letter to me you asked me to tell you something about my class, that of mid-year, 1929.

In our freshman year, young and inexperienced as we were in the ways of high school life, we gave promise of becoming a vital and active part of Central High School. This promising attitude was, in fact, so noticeable that we were given a "write up" in the "Bulletin." This article listed the various activities towards which we rookies were seemingly leaning. The Cadet Corps, as always, was the main attraction for the boys. As the afternoon session plan was then being used, freshmen were not qualified for football, basketball, and other sports of this kind. The Cadet ranks pointed a beckoning finger at those first-year boys who had a burning desire to do something for "the honor of the school."

Track for boys came second in popularity, and those not drilling in the rank and file were to be found trying their prowess at track feats.

The same clarion call summoned the girls to basketball and tennis and within a few months the freshman class was well on the road to being actually a part of the great student body. During this same year the "Goops," those obnoxious students who threw their luncheon trash hither and yon, once more came into existence. We hope no one thinks that the freshman had anything to do with them! Horrors, no! But they had a great deal to do with the campaign against those "Goops."

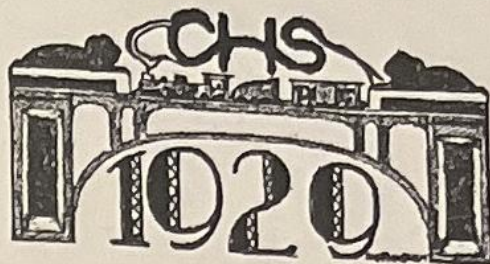

In February, 1926, came the students from the Junior Highs to swell our ranks of sophomores. With the addition of these pupils we were no longer meek, downtrodden freshmen, but a formidable army of sophomores. Central with our help carried off several important honors, one of which was the annual competitive drill. In this drill the Central cadets made a clean sweep, taking all places except one. The Rabbit's Foot Club was organized in 1926. What, I ask you, would our Spring Plays, our Fall Revues, any of our dramatics be without the help of this club in making up the actors in these remarkable school productions? In this club was learned the complete art of cosmetics.

We youngsters grew and advanced in classes as well as in years, as everyone must do eventually, until we came into our seniority, looked up to, and admired (we hope) by the rest of the school. Behind us in the past years were victories of our cadets, of our girls in rifle matches, of our football and other teams; the introduction of new systems, one of which was the organization of a girls' hockey team and another, the abolition of afternoon sessions so abhorred by the lower classes. The girls of this class were among the first hockey enthusiasts, and it was through their soliciting that hockey became a major sport. A lacrosse team was organized, and the first lacrosse game ever to be played in the nation's capital was between the Central team and that of Marston High School from Baltimore.

Another important change (besides the changing of the boys' voices) was the installation of a new assistant principal, Mr. L. G. Hoover, formerly our biology teacher, who took the place of Mr. Norman J. Nelson who went to Harvard. Mr. Nelson was a favorite with the student body and it required a good man to take his place in our hearts. However, we feel that Mr. Hoover is following his predecessor's footsteps in that respect, and, though we mourned the loss of a good fellow and sport in Mr. Nelson, we recognize in Mr. Hoover a kindred spirit and have welcomed him as such.

Oh yes, you asked me to mention the names of some of the graduates whom you might know. Do you by any chance remember that little blonde girl Reba Stewart who always took sardonic parts so well? She and Jack Baltz, Edward Ott, and Pauline Scanlan took quite active parts in the "Fall Revue." (Pauline, you know, lived in the

Valedictory of the Mid-Year Class of 1929

Mr. Miller, Other Members of the Faculty, Guests, and Classmates:

CLASSMATES of the mid-year class of 1929, I want to thank you most sincerely for the honor you have bestowed upon me in electing me your Valedictorian. It was not until after the election that I came to a full realization of the duty this office involves, and, "unaccustomed as I am to public speaking," and being a "woman of very few words," I knew not what I should say when the time arrived, nor how I should say it. Incidentally, I had heard one of the teachers remark that all one was supposed to say in a Valedictory address was "good-bye,"—not try to find a dozen ways of saying it,—simply say "good-bye." Naturally, this appealed to me as a bit of rare judgment and most excellent advice, and it was, therefore, precisely what I decided to do. However, as the time drew nearer and nearer, the task assigned to me seemed to become more and more difficult, until tonight, it looms up even larger than ever, as I stand up here facing you, realizing to the fullest extent that this, indeed, means "farewell"; furthermore, that, except for Commencement night, this is probably the last time it will ever again be possible for us to get together as a complete unit. A number of lasting friendships have been developed in this class; some few associations will continue further in other schools, clubs, fraternities, or elsewhere,—but our paths will, for the most part, diverge, scattering us to the four corners of the earth, and leaving with us nothing but fond memories.

For this reason, therefore, while we are happy tonight in the knowledge that we have accomplished what we set out to do,—or, in other words, have reached the goal for which we were striving,—this occasion is by no means without its atmosphere of sadness. Three, and in some cases, four years have we stood shoulder to shoulder in work and in play, each one lending to the other,—more or less unconsciously, perhaps,—that moral courage so essential to any success. Candidly, I want to say, that I am proud to be a member of Central's Mid-Year Graduating Class of 1929, and glad to have had the opportunity of spending my high school days with just such classmates as you who are assembled here tonight.

It is also my great pleasure to be able to express publicly, to the faculty, our most grateful appreciation for their patient, untiring efforts in helping us make the grade. I am sure that I voice the sentiment of the other members of the Class when I say, that to them belongs the praise and glory,—we were but clay in their hands, and I am confident their influence will be far-reaching.

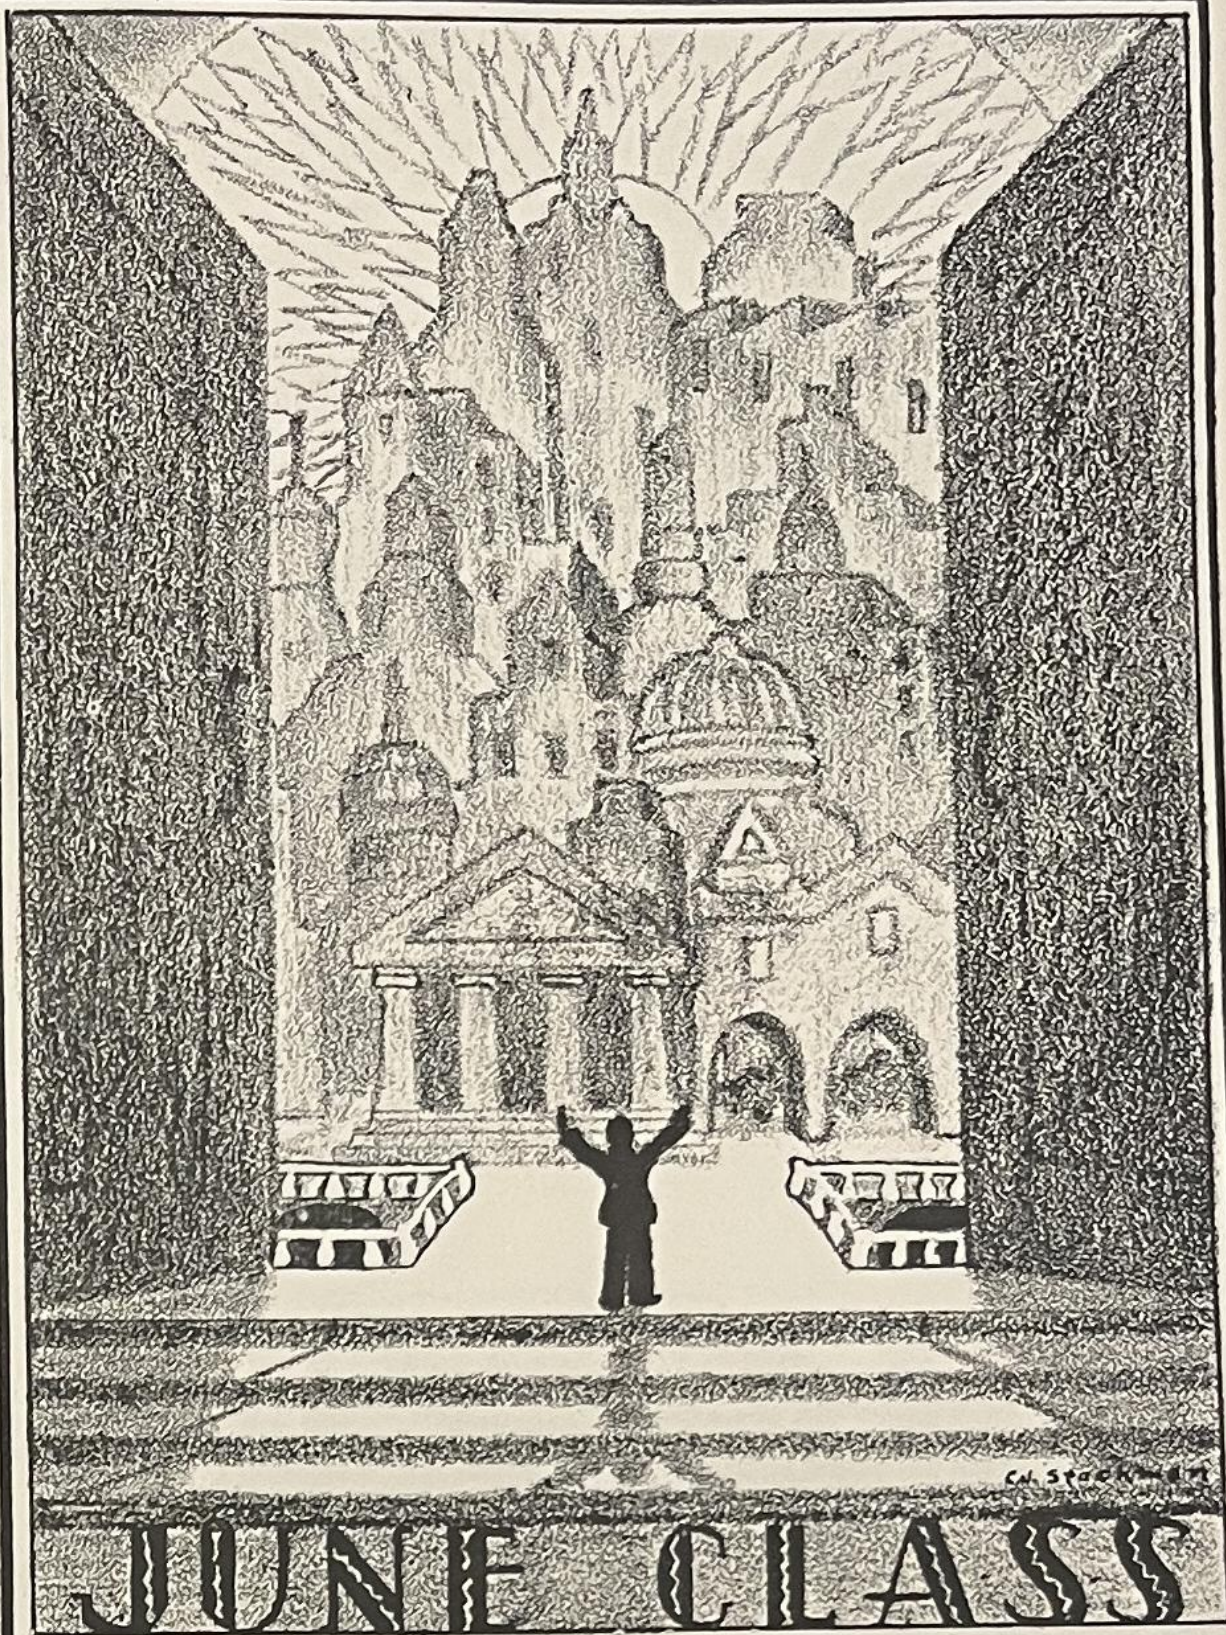

I know that you are all waiting to hear me say "good-bye," so "au revoir." I thank you!

DOROTHY M. HEFLEBOWER.
(Valedictorian.)

*Our passage through the sunlit vales,
Our course beneath the open skies
Is ended. Dark engulfs the rails
Where the black tunnel's entrance lies.
Is this the finish of it all,
The ending where the shadows rise?
No more behind the mountain wall
Awaits our blinking, startled eyes?
What used to seem the goal is but a stone to mark our journeyings,
And soon we shall emerge beyond to lovelier vistas, finer things.*

June History

TONIGHT is the last time we meet as the Senior Class of Central High School. We are about to realize the goal toward which we have striven for the past four years. Let us look back on those memorable four years and review the events that moulded our characters, and consider in retrospect the outstanding achievements that have marked our efforts.

It was a rather astonished group of freshmen that was received by Mr. Miller in this very hall four years ago. In his greeting to us his wonderful personality inculcated in us the high ideals and spirit of a Centralite. Our first year was called Central's Banner Year. Central's victories in football, basketball, baseball, and drill that year roused in us the desire to make every year of our school career a Banner Year.

The Alpha Chapter of the National Honor Society at Washington was installed this year. It is a society with the avowed purpose of publicly commending scholarship, character, and service among the students of the secondary schools of the nation. We were deeply impressed with the installation of this society, and our desire to obtain a high scholastic average was doubled by this recognition of attainment.

Our sophomore year marked the beginning of the achievements of the Class of '29. At this time we received from the junior high schools more classmates. Bonds of friendship were formed. Many of the class participated in the school's activities. Central's victory in basketball, the tie for first place in football, and second place in the competitive drill, inspired us to win the next year.

As juniors, the entire class engaged in activities. Our positions as assistants to the seniors gave us the opportunity to learn from their experience. In many cases we pressed them closely for honors. During our junior year our school publications were rated as first class. Central tied for the basketball championship and won second place in the competitive drill. We had been preparing all the time for the responsibilities of our senior year. When the senior class gave us the reins, we were trained and ready for the work.

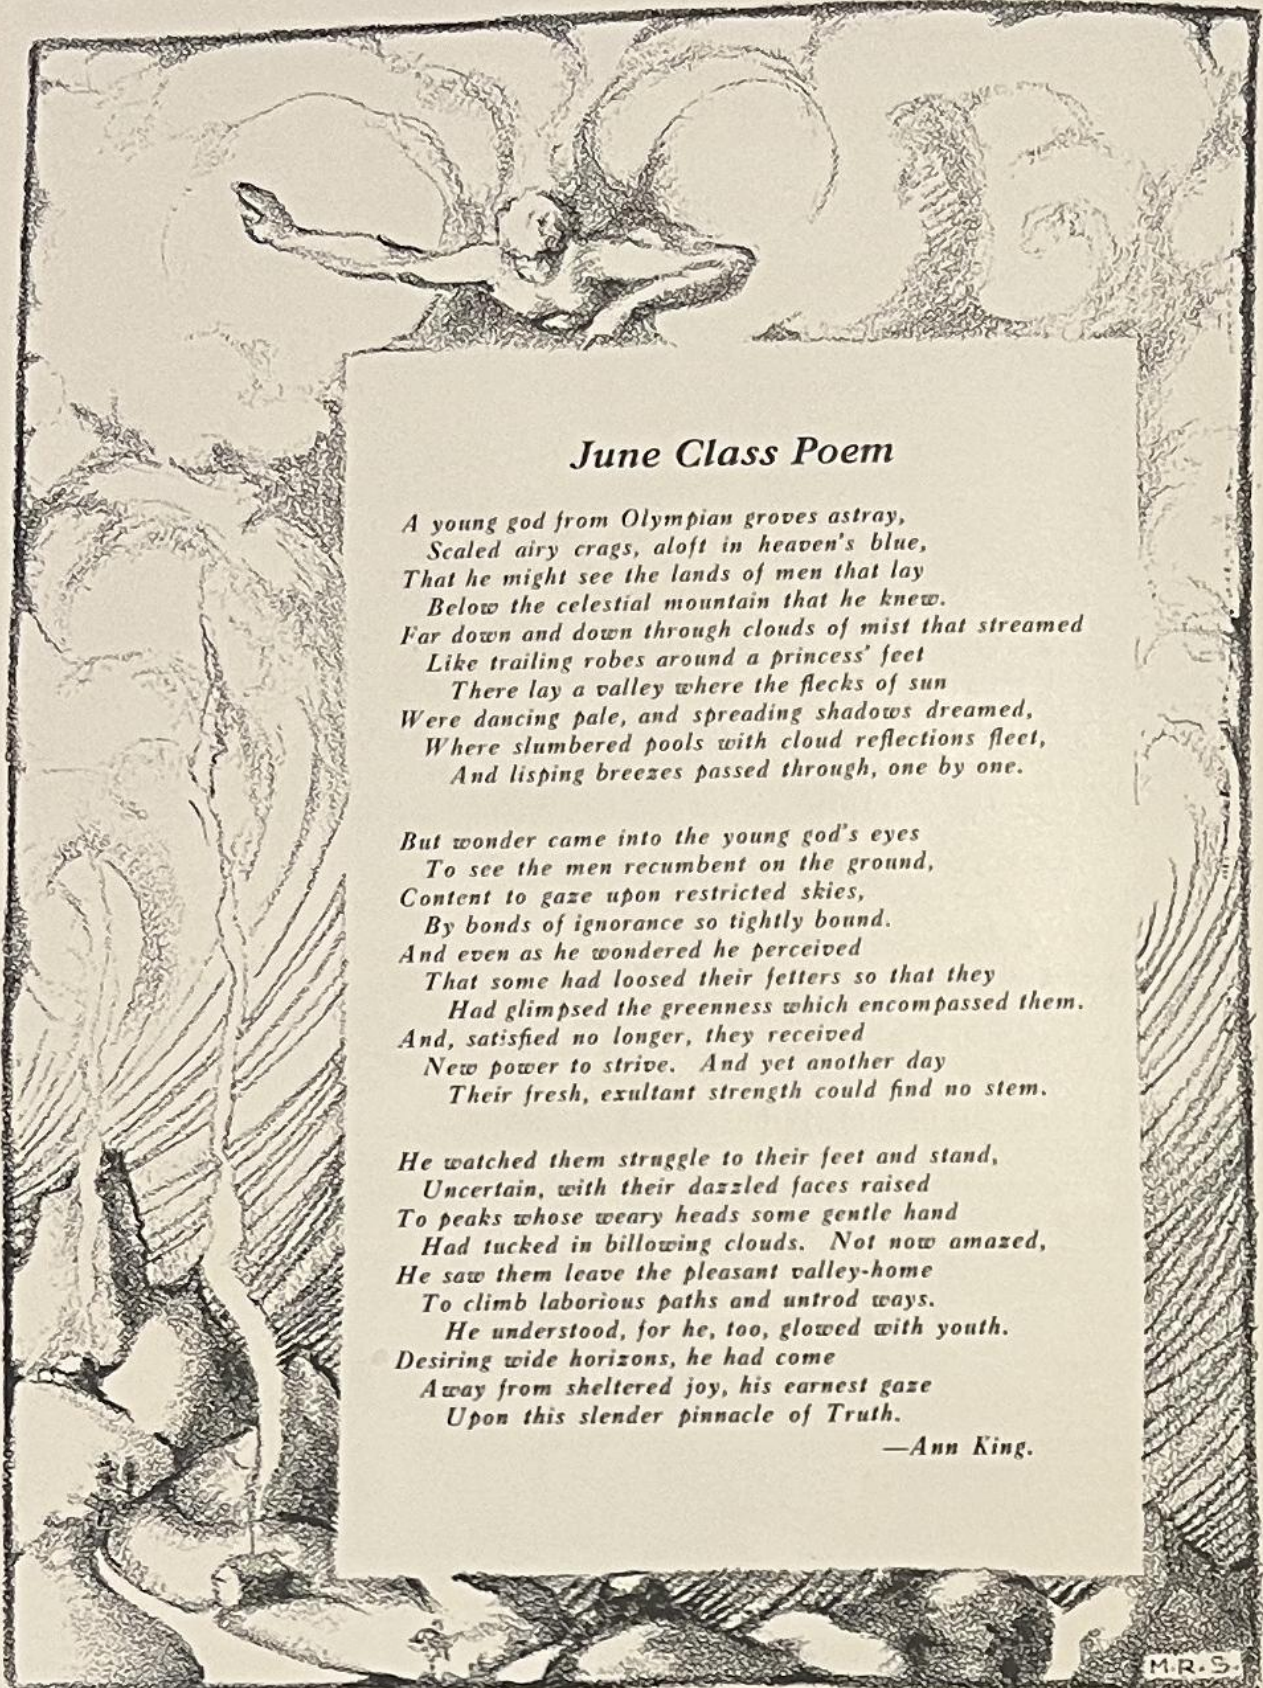

Norman J. Nelson, the assistant principal during our first three years at Central, left us at the beginning of our senior year. Mr. Nelson is esteemed by all of us for his sincerity and loyalty as a Centralite. Mr. Hoover, who at the time was a member of Central's faculty, took up the work of assistant principal. We have already learned to appreciate his sterling qualities and his coöperation in student affairs.

Our last year has been marked by achievements in many branches. Our football team made a splendid showing, considering the fact that we started with a new team. Central's swimming team came through the season undefeated by any school. Our publications have again achieved a first-class rating. The spring play is known to be the best Central has produced in many years. At present we look forward to success in both the track team and the competitive drill. The scholastic attainments of our class are superior to any of our predecessors. There are fifteen students with all "E" records.

We extend our thanks to Mr. Miller for his guidance during these years of our life. We hope future classes will be as fortunate as we to have such a splendid leader.

Now that we close these sacred portals of our school life, and thrust the flaming torch into the hands of the juniors, let our history never cease to be a record of success. Let us carry on the splendid work to new fields.

CHARLES FRANCIS SQUIRE.

June Class Poem

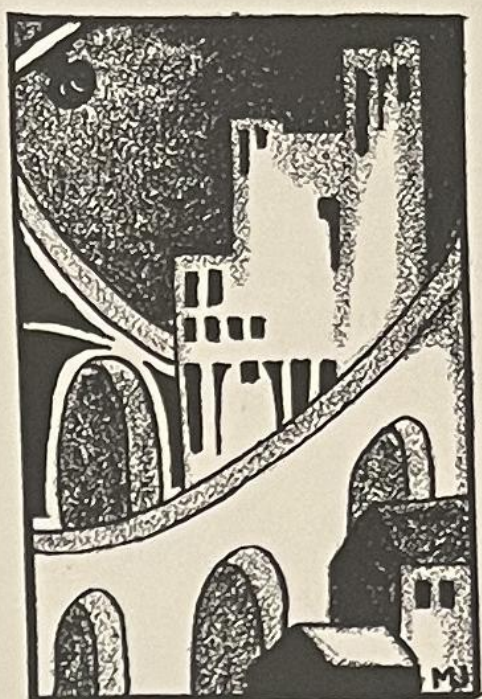

*A young god from Olympian groves astray,
Scaled airy crags, aloft in heaven's blue,
That he might see the lands of men that lay
Below the celestial mountain that he knew.
Far down and down through clouds of mist that streamed
Like trailing robes around a princess' feet
There lay a valley where the flecks of sun
Were dancing pale, and spreading shadows dreamed,
Where slumbered pools with cloud reflections fleet,
And lisp'ing breezes passed through, one by one.*

*But wonder came into the young god's eyes
To see the men recumbent on the ground,
Content to gaze upon restricted skies,
By bonds of ignorance so tightly bound.
And even as he wondered he perceived
That some had loosed their fetters so that they
Had glimpsed the greenness which encompassed them.
And, satisfied no longer, they received
New power to strive. And yet another day
Their fresh, exultant strength could find no stem.*

*He watched them struggle to their feet and stand,
Uncertain, with their dazzled faces raised
To peaks whose weary heads some gentle hand
Had tucked in billowing clouds. Not now amazed,
He saw them leave the pleasant valley-home
To climb laborious paths and untrod ways.
He understood, for he, too, glowed with youth.
Desiring wide horizons, he had come
Away from sheltered joy, his earnest gaze
Upon this slender pinnacle of Truth.*

—Ann King.

June Valedictory

RICHARD K. LYON

Friends of the Evening, Members of the Faculty, My Own Classmates:

TONIGHT our company, the June Class of 1929, marches forward to face the greatest competition of its life, the everlasting struggle with the trials and tribulations of the world. As we make final preparations for our departure, let us not forget old Central through whose constant teaching and ever-faithful guidance we have been fitted to meet our unknown destiny with confidence—Central, who has given so much and asked for so little. During our past school years we have dreamed of this occasion as the golden hour of joyful success, but now an overhanging cloud of sorrow is in evidence as we realize the true significance of our farewell.

This evening marks the turning point in our lives. We are a band of young men and women about to make our initial entrance upon the battle-scarred field of life, to make our first bid for worldly achievement and recognition. No longer are we a dependent part of Central; no longer can we rely upon her helpful supervision in times of need. Life and fate are now placed in our own hands. But there is no fear, for deep in our hearts each and every one of us has a spark of that undying Central spirit, that steadfastness of purpose, that ideal of right, which shall ever keep us on the straight and narrow path to victory.

Before we depart from these friendly halls—our training quarters and drill field—we must pay our respects and bestow our insufficient praise and thanks upon the members of the faculty who have given us this preparation, the power to solve the problems we are about to face. From them we have come to learn of Central honor, Central loyalty, true Central spirit. We shall never forget the debt we owe them.

Not only have we been thoroughly instructed in these principles, but we have actually learned to realize them in the various competitions of our scholastic activities. We know what it means to fight for the school we love, to pay her back with our very all, to make her proud of our clean sportsmanship, both in victory and defeat. Honest effort combined with Central steadfastness is the real keynote of success.

Four years or so ago we were mere recruits, fresh from the primary drilling and instruction of our grammar school days. At that time the completion of our high school course seemed so remote, so far away; but now, at last, we have reached our goal. We have changed from the awkward squad to a trained, efficient unit.

We hope that during our stay at Central we have not remained idle, that we have not accepted all her helpful teachings without some sign of our deep gratitude. There is hardly one in this class who has not endeavored to do something for the school; but try as we may, we can never fully return to Central what she has given to us. Classmates, do you not see that we must continue to repay her efforts after we depart? Do you not realize that it is only through our achievement and true accomplishment in the future that Central may be rewarded for her labors in our behalf? We must carry on for her, as she has toiled and striven for us. While here we have tried to maintain Central's time-honored traditions; in life we must do the same.

So, comrades, let us give our salute of farewell to her, the West Point of our world, and then march boldly forward, bearing the beloved colors of Central, and singing from the very depths of our hearts "Tenax Propositi!"

The Dramatic Situation in Central

ROBERT BALL

WITH a sigh of genuine relief the Central stage settles back on its props for a three months' vacation, after a year of unusual and remunerative activity. Beginning with rehearsals for the Fall Revue in October and closing with the performance of "The Trysting Place," by Booth Tarkington, as the Class Night play June 14, scarcely a day passed without a dramatic presentation, rehearsal, or tryout of some kind. Of course, the time could be extended if you consider the handing of a diploma to certain people on June 19 as a dramatic presentation.

October 5 marked the first tryout for parts in the Fall Show, and there passed in review before Miss Orr and Mrs. Gill a procession of aspiring artists—singly, in pairs, and in groups. The acts ranged from "song and dance" to classic melody and terpsichorean interpretations, and from one-act plays to horses. After days and weeks of elimination and improvement (rehearsing), a dress rehearsal was attempted. This proved successful, and with set jaw and stout heart the motley assemblage was paraded before an admiring audience that filled the auditorium with applause. If variety is the spice of life, then that cast was pickled. Magicians, salesmen, fleas, aesthetic clod-hoppers, singers and sopranos; in fact, everything took part in that show. Gene Stevens will long be remembered as the spirit of something or other.

Hardly had we put away our skis and thoughts of Santa Claus, and returned to school, when the title of the spring vehicle (stage chatter for play) was announced to a select few. A few weeks later it was made public by that great news disseminator, the Bulletin. A great turnout of dramatic rookies was the result of this announcement. After a series of dramatic interpretations, the cast was cast and rehearsals began.

It has been said that rehearsals either make or break a play—but ours merely tickled it. As a sure cure for the blues, imagine Gene Stevens playing hopscotch on the grill, forty feet above the stage; Ralph Williams dashing madly over to Mack's for sandwiches at 6 o'clock; Virginia Rand refusing to eat anything but two or three of Bud Weaver's apples because—well—er—uh; Bud Norcross and Teddy Tiller competing to see which could say "daffodeeeeels" the better; Hugh Smith eating candy, apples, and chewing gum, and talking into the 'phone simultaneously without losing anything except his lines; Betty Monroe trying to act less vampish and Betty Coon more so, as Marella; and so on for volumes.

No one in the cast will ever forget those hectic days of rehearsal, and more rehearsal, and still more rehearsal. Then finally they decided we had played around in the afternoon long enough, so they had a night practice and called that a dress rehearsal. That was pretty good, too, so one day Miss Orr said, "They've fooled around for a long time now; let's demonstrate them to the public." But Mrs. Gill said, "We'll have to charge for that, so we can pay the tailor for those tux and Miss Crawford for all those apples Bud's eaten." Mr. Miller said that was a good idea, so on the evening of March 8 the curtain rose and the play was on. So was the audience.

The Bulletin, Mabelle Jennings, and the actors all agreed that it was a good performance. Parents, friends, faculty, and a microscopic public came the first two nights, but during the ensuing week the news spread like wild oatcakes and the auditorium was packed to capacity at 50 cents, 75 cents and $1 a head.

After paying the tailor, Miss Crawford, and the newspapers (not satisfied with complimentaries), there was a little left in the bank, so a banquet was thrown for the cast and stage crew and Mr. Miller, consisting of ice cream and cake with hot fudge sauce. Speeches were in order. Each speaker threw the blame on someone else till finally it landed on Miss Orr, Mrs. Gill, and Adelaide Woodley, prompter, where it rightfully belonged. Everyone blushed pleasantly and had a good time.

The Spring Play over with, thoughts turned to studies and the operetta scheduled for

“New Lamps for Old”

EARL RILEY

WITH a sigh of satisfaction because of a year's work well done, and with a sigh of relief because of an exacting apprenticeship of two years faithfully served, the Class of 1929 passes the milestone of a successful Junior year. These erstwhile Tenderfeet are about to come into their own, for with the march of time the “Old Timers” are preparing to “move on” and these young “Trail Blazers” will soon take the affairs of Central High School under their guidance. Ambition for higher standards has forged them into new and unexplored fields in oratory, scholarship, athletics and social contact. Friendship has brought a keener understanding between the classes and the faculty. And the blue and white, the traditional colors, wind in and out of every year and every activity.

The irresponsible and now carefree Seniors have left behind them, this year, a wonderful mark in the history of Central, but the past year for the Juniors has been far from an uneventful or an honorless one. They have been successful in their council, which has worked the entire year in cleaning up, as far as possible, difficulties that for some time have been prevalent at Central, aiding in the lunchroom clean-up campaign, and helping their own class in general.

The Junior Prom of the 1929 class was very successful and showed in a large measure the ability and skill of those who undertook to give it.

The Seniors and graduating class of '29 have placed before us a goal that will honor us to attain. It is composed of: Good school spirit, that fairly makes the halls of “good old Central” ring; sportsmanship, that helps to win her games; high scholastic ratings, that carry her glory on into the unknown and uncertain field of life, and, last but not least, ability in athletics, dramatics, and cadets, that places Central as the best school in the land. It is with a feeling of genuine responsibility that the Junior Class has prepared to assume its twofold burden of making more permanent the traditions established by its predecessors and of further blazing the trail for future generations.

HE EARNS TWICE AS MUCH as his classmates who graduated at the same time he did—this young man whose picture you see above. He has found that special business training after a high school education does count—and counts a good deal. For he knows now that his value to his employer is twice that which is placed on the untrained workers in his office.

He sees young men who were seniors in his school when he was just a mere “soph”—he sees the men working for lower salaries than he obtained to start.

Why? The answer is simple. Because he did not waste any time “getting experience.” He went right ahead and learned, in a short time, those things that it would take years of experience to teach.

Wouldn't you like to know just how he did it—how hundreds of young men just out of high school are attaining success and its rewards? Even if you contemplate entering college, remember that business training will stand you in good stead always. Send for our booklet, “STEPPING STONES.” It is filled with information that concerns you. It may be the key that will open the doors of success to you. Don't hesitate; but fill in the coupon right now. It will take just a moment to mail it to us.

mines of the Romans in the Alps had claimed his attention. He had lain for weeks delirious with malarial fever in Burma.

But even in those days Hoover's life was not all made up of wanderings in the far places. He had offices in London, New York, and San Francisco. While his headquarters were in London most of the time, he was a well-known figure in Shanghai, Berlin, and Melbourne, as well as in New York and San Francisco. He was a trustee of Stanford University, and always managed to get back there for the annual meetings. His home was in Palo Alto, California. London and other cities were only stopping places.

Hoover has witnessed or lived more stories than Kipling ever wrote. But to one who encounters him casually he is about as unromantic a figure as one would meet anywhere. Whenever his work has permitted, his existence has been as regular as a clock. He breathes an air of friendly confidence. He has never lost his American accent, and he always betrayed his nationality in the remotest part of the English-speaking world. Those who know him best say that his capacity for friendship is the crown of his character.

When Hoover was only twenty-four years old he was doing highly specialized work at high fees in the zinc mines of Western Australia. His world career as consulting and developing engineer had begun. He developed the coal mines of the mandarin statesman and capitalist, Chang Yen Mow, and put 20,000 workmen into them.

He mined, and he built railways and metallurgical works in Korea, the Malay States, India, South Africa, Italy, Great Britain, Mexico, the Central and South Americas, the United States, and Canada.

beauty and the symbolism of the picture made by the combined efforts of nature and man. Words cannot describe the mingled feelings of worship of beauty, love, and reverence, which were ours as we moved closer and closer to this beautiful expression of a people's love for something far above life as one day's labor after another. Here many workers were, with their united efforts, expressing in a lasting way the highest of their lofty ideals. After seeing so many engineering triumphs for the development of business and Governmental transactions, we all felt that here was the greatest of all, the soul, given expression through the ability of architects and engineers.

We alighted from the Ford to get a closer view of our Cathedral. Although far from complete, there was much to see. All of the exterior work of the chancel is finished. Construction is now underway in the crossing; after this come the two transepts and then the nave. Impressive because of their great size were the four piers at the corners of the crossing to support the huge tower. Below the chancel lies Bethlehem Chapel, already completed, awe-inspiring in its quiet way, the resting place of several national figures. As we left, one might have perceived by our words and actions that something of the spirit of the place had entered our hearts and minds.

Arlington Bridge

He visualized the rising tide on the island shore, the hissing sparks, the partially burning trunks wallowing in the water. And this had drifted away and out across the river with the breeze . . . dynamite . . . kingdom come" . . . and only the thin sides of the barge, already half eaten through.

It was only a second, but in the next period a score of years passed before young Carter's face. A barefooted youngster was arranging a line of pebbles across a rivulet after a rain, and launching a single sailboat in the pond over the hill. The scenes flashed, and a lad was working on a four-foot cave under the bluff, and running a swaying suspension bridge between the crowns of two giant elms. Then a youth was moving through the setting of an Eastern city. Then there was Mary Margaret, come East also—Washington—the long, happy years at Central together—the graduation—the course in the Southern technical institution, and finally—Ted Carter.

All this seemed a life unreservedly dedicated to the outdoor science. Ted could see in his mind now the bridge bursting and rising in thunderous confusion, the Memorial on the hill crumbling, perhaps the Monument . . .

It was only for a second; then the decision came, unconsciously, involuntarily. Ted Carter was an Engineer. He did not even think of a hurried flight to the Virginia shore. Mary Margaret was a flushed face vigorously nodding approval. The bridge—the bridge.

A minute later he was pushing the smoldering log out into the whispering river. Then there were pourings of water, and steam that rose from the charred timbers, and more water sloshed on the explosives below, and hysterical searchings for more patches of stubborn sparks.

Finally the two were satisfied and sat down panting on the edge of the boat. What an end for their night of romance. Presently Ted retrieved the canoe from where it had drifted when scraped by the log, and they got into it. More burning trees might come, and they must keep watch.

The canoe headed slowly out toward the middle of the Potomac. Three hundred yards from the bank there was a ripping sound in the queerly gleaming fabric, and water spurted up with bewildering vehemence. The river seemed rising up . . .

The glow in the East grew brighter and a glittering crescent lay on the ridges of the Maryland hills. The Western breeze calmed and the wavelets lapped more softly on the sea-wall. The bridge was milky in the sunlight and the slowly leaking barge beneath less shadowy. The cherry trees along the Basin were a weaving line of fairies, their robes moving faintly in the dying wind. A new Spring had come to the city, and to two individuals who were perhaps more fortunate than their fellow Washingtonians.

A prisoner cannot beat against the bars of his cell forever: he becomes weary. So the storm suddenly ceased. The wind grew calm and the cedars straightened themselves gradually. Nature had lost.

The work went on, and the men dug and measured until at last the tunnel was finished. A gleam of silver rails at the opening and then darkness was all that could be seen of it. Many people came to watch the first train go through and there was much clapping and hat-tossing. Men spoke into microphones, addressing others all over the country.

The mountain began to accustom itself to the trains, so that their mournful whistle ceased to mean anything to him. Finally, he began to look forward to the time when the locomotive should plunge into the tunnel with its undulating load of cars behind it. He realized that in this he had at last found the companionship he had desired. All things were equal between them and so Nature was not defeated after all.

Helping Yourself

If you crave exciting work, why not be a window cleaner? That is good, healthy work with a great opportunity for advancement—when you get through with one pane, go to the next.

Operating (or operating on) the telephone might be attractive to some enterprising young person. You would always know what “he said to me,” and, incidentally, there would be time for study.

How about driving a taxi, nights? When one can’t “go places,” the alternative is to take somebody else thither.

Those who are studious can secure positions as tutors. Revenge is sweet! What a joy to hear the other fellow decline verbs and conjugate nouns, or what have you!

Drumming up business for the laundry is a favorite collegiate occupation. With a smooth line of chatter, the old high school HOOEY, you ought to convince a fellow that you can get his duds done up more quickly at the laundry you represent. Take along some soap on these visits. If you can’t take his clothes away, take his money and leave the soap.

Those who like to balance a tray on their little finger should work at the college inn. What a chance for practice for married life! After four years of it, we should be able to serve tea to our wife’s bridge set without spilling it down their necks.

Seriously speaking, don’t let the question of money stand in your way. A firm foundation in your chosen field of endeavor will never be regretted. Part-time employment and your books should be a pleasing combination.

College is a question for the individual. But so many young people are enrolled in our institutions of higher learning that there must be something concrete in what they offer. No matter what your chosen career, college should enlarge its possibilities.

Let’s be big Centralites of ’29, not just “so big,” but a whole lot bigger. College beckons us. It deserves serious consideration. What will it give us? What can we get out of it? All we need to do is to work. Education, achievement, and success will result.

Class History—Mid-Year, 1929

Orient for some time.) Frank Cogswell, too, was in the "Revue." Frank's greatest ambition is to go on the stage, and I must say he has made a good start here at school. Another one of our girls, Mary Day, who tripped the light fantastic in the "Fall Vaudeville" is putting her talent to good use outside of school as well as inside. Mary teaches a dancing class and has been featured in many local entertainments throughout the city.

Dorothy Dorian, who shows particular talent in art, is interested in costume designing, and Mildred Skinner, better known as "Bunny," has used her talent to obtain for her the position of art editor on our "Review." Another budding artist is Evelyn Mooney who is taking up classes at the Corcoran Art School.

Our class has literary talent as well as dramatic, as anyone who has ever read any of Dorothy Dunlap's works can readily see. Many of her poems and other writings have been published in various magazines. Dorothy Lausen, also, has carried off more than one first prize in short story contests sponsored by the Washington Post.

Among our athletes is Herbert Olsen, our president, who was on this year's football team. It would be hard to enumerate the honors that Alfred Ogus and "Randy" Robinson have carried off in tennis. The basketball team, too, is going to miss Ralph Lovell. The Kremkau twins (the only pair of which our class can boast) one of whom is George, our treasurer, were two of the best cheer leaders we ever had.

I mentioned Central's winning the Girls' National Rifle Match. Marjorie Jemison and Virginia Mackintosh have both participated in rifle matches and have had their share in bringing the trophies home to Central.

During these years the school has progressed from good to better, and we look back with pride on the many victories both mental and physical.

We see that we have fulfilled the promise of our freshman year, that of being a true child of our Alma Mater.

As we board the ship of future ambitions, we turn and see our high school days waving us a fond adieu and bon voyage on our long journey.

As always, lovingly yours,

E. BURGESS ROBERTS.

The Dramatic Situation in Central

May 24. Mrs. Toibert, though comparatively new at Central, has ideas and the ambition to carry them through, as "The Lady of the Terrace" proved.

The Fall Revue, "Take My Advice," the side-splitting comedy and the operetta comprise the three main events in Central stage presentations. The Christmas Chapel Play, so admirably presented; the February Class Play, the Lincoln Chapel Play, and, of course, the June Class Play, "The Trysting Place," complete the bill.

It is generally conceded that the season of '28-'29 has been the most successful aesthetically and financially that Central has ever experienced, and the members of this class can take to themselves a great deal of the credit.

We will be graduated from Central, it is true, but it is after graduation that memories begin; memories of chapels and operettas, and "The Play," and—The Dramatic Situation in Central.

CARRY'S Delicious Ice Cream Has No Peer"

Sir John Grant, noted British authority, says: * * * Now that slow-to-learn London has taken to Ice Cream, that favorite American luxury, our national dietary is improved by a delightful refreshment which is also nutriment in a highly palatable form."

As a food dessert, CARRY'S ICE CREAM has no peer. For home parties and entertainments it is the ideal refreshment
— proper on all occasions.
